

Team Player

Over time, and through numerous experiences, I have learned to become a team player. Life has taught me that possessing the ability to become a team player and get along with others around you is essential in the path to success. One of the things that has helped me to gain this attribute is my involvement in team sports. I have been playing competitive sports since kindergarten. This includes club soccer and club volleyball. Those who didn't learn to play as a team and compliment their teammates, inevitably failed. This lesson carries over to school, as well, and helps group projects run smoothly. Because I know how to cooperate with others, and have learned to recognize other's weaknesses and strengths, my group projects always run flawlessly. It is unquestionable that knowing how to be a team player will help me advance in life.